Investigative Field Analysis

Each partner country carried out a research and prepared a national report. The national reports aim to introduce each country's environmental problems and how the country is dealing with them – not only on a national, but also on a local and personal level. On top of that, each country presented barriers for migrants in learning a new language as well as ways of coping.

After completing their reports that represent the first part of this research, the project partners conducted a field investigation with target groups members (adult learners and low-qualified migrants, adult educators/trainers, migrant support workers), investigating the actual situation among these groups.

This international report is a compilation of both countries' national research and investigation that aims to present each country's national reports and results.

"Every single one of us can contribute to a healthier climate by adopting a more eco-friendly lifestyle. The engaging and inspiring stories of CHELLIS will spark motivation and interest in this topic."

Progress & developments

The CHELLIS team is already working on its second output, the CHELLIS Handbook Magazine, which will be available early next year. It will include not only articles on the topic, but also practice peek videos which will provide insights into practice.

The development for the third project output, the CHELLIS Interactive Online Platform is also already in its initial planning phases. The platform, featuring stories and illustrations on environmental topics, will be launched for pilot testing next spring.

Later this year, the project consortium will meet in a training session to prepare for the work on these upcoming project results.

"The CHELLIS stories make language learning easy and accessible by providing stories for different language levels."
